School board hears evaluation conference report

A report as staff evaluations continues in the Muncie Consolidated School district was presented to the school board meeting Tuesday evening by Dr. Gary Gassman, superintendent, and Mrs. Evelyn Johnston, district evaluation coordinator.

Mrs. Johnston introduced the Responsive School Evaluation System (RSES) which is being conducted by the American Institutes for Research, with funding from the National Education Association and the National Science Foundation.

The purpose of the evaluation is to improve the quality of education by identifying strengths and weaknesses in the school system, according to Mrs. Johnston.

She said the evaluation was not intended to judge individual teachers, but was intended as a tool to help identify weaknesses in the overall system.

The evaluation was conducted over a period of three years, with the results being used to identify areas for improvement.

The evaluation process involved administering a series of questionnaires to students, teachers, and parents, as well as conducting observation of classroom instruction.

The results of the evaluation were presented to the school board in a report, which included recommendations for improvement.

The school board has already taken steps to implement some of the recommendations, according to Mrs. Johnston.

She said the board was committed to improving the quality of education in the district, and was working with staff to develop specific plans to address the identified weaknesses.

The results of the evaluation are expected to be used to guide future decision-making in the district, as well as to inform the public about the quality of education being provided.

School board officials said they were pleased with the results of the evaluation, and believed it would help the district to improve its educational services.

The evaluation process has been ongoing for several years, and is expected to continue for an additional two years, according to Mrs. Johnston.

The results of the evaluation will be shared with the public, and will be used to inform future decision-making in the district.
