MUSCATINE (AP) - About 5,000 Muscatine school children are participating in a four-year-old study by University of Iowa physicians and researchers to identify health risk factors and prescribe proper treatment before the youngsters reach adulthood.

"Hopefully, we are coming closer to conquering heart and related diseases," says Dr. Ronald Lauer, pediatrie cardiologist at the university and senior investigator for the study.

He said Muscatine is one of three cities in the nation selected for the study because of its stable school population.

Identifying Factors

The children are taking part in the study to identify those factors which could lead to heart attacks, strokes, high blood pressure, obesity and diabetes as adults.

"Here we are able to survey children in kindergarten and continue investigation through states, the District of Columbia. high school," Lauer says. The other cities in the study are to Rico. Bogalusa, La., and Rochester, Minn. Dr. Lauer says the studies are being watched with and student-directed projects special interest by national health authorities.

Risk factors the investigators want to identify where present in the children include high serum blood cholesterol levels, high triglyceride amounts, obesity and high blood pressure. Smoking is another heart disease risk factor found in young adults and adults. Lauer says.

Begin Earlier

He says other studies show that heart disease, arteriosclerosis and hypertension often begin far earlier than that when symptoms become obvious.

"Although symptoms of these diseases begin to show $10,320 for an environmental inlate middle age, the damage already has been at work," Lauer says.

"By identifying risk factors in children and then prescribing proper treatment, we interfere with these factors. Thus we interfere with the progression of the disease ... we hope the end result of our research here is to lengthen lives."

In the first few years of the Muscatine study, about 5 per-cent of the children had elevated levels of blood serum fats. Subsequent studies by researchers and school nurses show that only one-third of those students still have high cholesterol, Lauer says. The children have been receiving treatment and advice at a free clinic set up in Muscatine by the university's college of medicine.

Other Problems

Several other health problems in some students were identified through the screen-

During the first year of the study, 1969-70, about 500 children were screened. "In the second year, we asked the same children to participate again," Lauer says.

"After the first two years we had identified those with ricks. We had to continue rescreening those children and to make more precise determinations. Now we are involved in screening family
